WELCOME, JUDGE LEWIS!

RABBI FERDINAND M. ISSERMAN

A former Russian Jewish immigrant, who experienced all the hardships and privations of the stranger penniless in a new country, but who like so many thousands overcame the obstacles of a new environment and by sheer power of will and character raised himself to a position of influence and importance, will be the guest of Toronto Jewry next Sunday, in the person of Judge William M. Lewis, of Philadelphia. Not so many years ago, Judge Lewis was working all day and studying at night to prepare himself for greater community service. To-day he is one of the leading jurists of a great city, serving his second term as judge of the superior court of Philadelphia. Judge Lewis's success has not alienated him from the Jewish community. Active in all Jewish work, Judge Lewis has particularly distinguished himself for his devotion to Jewish education and the cause of Zionism. It was his experience as judge which made him an enthusiast for Jewish education. He it was who made the statement: "Of the Jewish youth brought before me charged with criminal offences, 98 per cent. had no Jewish religious training." He it was who helped to rouse the Philadelphia Jewish community to the fact that Jewish education was the concern of the entire community. For many years Judge Lewis has served the Zionist cause as worker in the ranks, and later as militant leader. His abilities and services were recognized when he was invited to become chairman of the United Palestine Appeal to succeed Dr. Stephen S. Wise and to lead American Zionists in the largest fund-raising campaign in the history of the Zionist movement. Judge Lewis is not coming to Toronto to raise funds. Though successful, and a Zionist, Judge Lewis has not outgrown the Synagogue. He sees it as the spiritual dynamo which gives power and impetus to all Jewish life. Judge Lewis has risen from the ranks of Jewish life, but he has never forgotten those who were less successful than he. There is about him none of the arrogance, aloofness and snobishness which so often characterizes successful Jews. He is to-day what he was thirty years ago, a good Jew, who loves the beautiful and poetic in humanity, and also in his own people. The Toronto Jewish community welcomes the opportunity to make his acquaintance.

CONVERTING THE JEWS

A Toronto newspaper recently carried the report of a Jewish apostate (meshummed) who claimed he was doing fine work in the local Jewish community, and presumably was making progress in converting the local Jews. A few months ago, the Vatican gave its encouragement to an organization which was going to do missionary work among Jews. An American cardinal protested against the Vatican's attitude. Last year, the local community was visited by the head of an international organization of converted Jews. It is the custom on Good Friday in some of the older churches to have a collection for Jewish conversion. Some of us still recall with regret the stinging and vicious appeal made last year on behalf of the souls. Of course, Jews resent these constant and continuous

JEWISH INSTITUTIONS—EPHEMERAL AND EDUCATIONAL

If there is any respect in which the Jewish people excel their neighbours, it is in their capacity for conceiving and creating an unbelievable number and variety of institutions.

Let your eye roam over the panorama of Jewish life: Here you have an organization for providing hope-chests for hopeless spinsters. Next you will see an agglomeration of people whose functions in life it is to provide decent burial for the dead. Further you will see an association of individuals cemented together by memories of some little Polish town, where they all enjoyed nativity. And there is the group founded for the purpose of promoting phonetic orthography in Yiddish. And there is the committee for supervising the distribution of meat. And there is the religious school, where little Jews are taught the externalities of Jewish life which their elders are diligently shedding. And there are the organizations for distributing oranges to the sick in the hospitals, and the organizations to supply milk to poor mothers and their unfortunate children, and organizations for building Palestine, and organizations to buy curtains for the vestries of the synagogues, and organizations to look after shoes and stockings of the indigent. There are, too, the cultural organizations which give the local professors a chance occasionally to speak to an appreciative audience. You need but think of any interest or concern in life—there is a society or institution sponsoring it and glorifying it into an ideal.

Of course all these concretions of group ideas are evidence and products of the terrific endeavours of the Jewish people to adjust themselves to their new surroundings. The Jews are aware that the simple unity of their life has been broken. Whereas formerly their conduct was the unfolding of a pattern in harmony with the design of their background and environment, their activities here are disjointed and meaningless. They are therefore nervously casting about for any idea or scheme that may appear to give meaning and stability to the actions of a group. They are seeking for the ballast of mass-will as against the uncertainty of individual drifting.

The bulk of our organizations and institutions are naturally ephemeral. They represent but a transitory mood, a momentary fumbling. When the people will have established themselves more firmly in their new life, and caught the tempo of its rhythm, they will apply more abiding standards to the play of their social powers. They will be more consistent and logical. They will have a set of intelligent values consonant with the purposive tendencies of their existence.

However, in the whirl of our communal blundering we are entitled even at this stage to demand a degree of circumspectness and responsibility in the particular sphere of educational activity. We establish educational institutions for our young. We presume to supply guidance which shall shape the attitudes of our new generation to the world around them. And here we may rightly put up this proposition to our elders in charge: You are living in a new world which unfortunately it is not given to you fully to understand. You have your own world with its beauties and values. You choose to

THE HOLIDAY OF FREEDOM ALSO A HOLIDAY OF EQUALITY

PASSOVER, THE FIRST HOLIDAY OF FREEDOM PROCLAIMED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD WHEN THE JEWISH NATION LAID THE CORNERSTONE OF HUMAN CIVILIZATION, IS ALSO A HOLIDAY OF EQUALITY. ON THE SEIDUR-TABLE OF RICH AND POOR WHO COMMEMORATE THE EXODUS FROM EGYPT, THE MATZOH, ZROAH, BITTER HERBS AND THE CHAROSETH SYMBOLIZE THE EQUALITY OF MAN, THE COMMON SUFFERING THAT WAS ONCE THE LOT OF ALL JEWS IN BONDAGE AND THE FREEDOM WHICH THE JEWS ARE NOW ENJOYING.

THE EQUALITY IN JEWISH HOMES THROUGHOUT AMERICA IS MADE ALL THE MORE APPARENT BY THE FACT THAT THE SEIDUR-TABLE EVERYWHERE IS GRACED WITH THE SAME MATZOH—THE HOROWITZ-MARGARETEN MATZOH, THE MATZOH FAMOUS FOR FORTY-THREE YEARS AND FAVOURED FOR ITS KOSHRUTH AND QUALITY, FOR ITS GOODNESS AND DELICIOUSNESS, FOR ITS PURITY, FRESHNESS AND RICHNESS OF FLAVOUR.

IN THE FINEST HOMES OF EVERY CITY AND TOWN IN AMERICA, HOROWITZ-MARGARETEN MATZOH IS USED BECAUSE THE FOREMOST RABBIS IN THE COUNTRY AND ALSO THE CHIEF RABBI OF PALESTINE, RABBI ABRAHAM ISAAC COOK, ON HIS VISIT TO AMERICA, GAVE THEIR HEARTY ENDORSEMENT OF THE STRICT KOSHRUTH OF THESE MATZOHS. AND HOROWITZ-MARGARETEN MATZOH IS ALWAYS PREFERRED BECAUSE NO OTHER IS AS GOOD OR DELICIOUS.

HOROWITZ-MARGARETEN MATZO-MEAL IS PACKED IN SEALED BOXES SO THAT NOT A PARTICLE OF DUST MAY ENTER.

ALL GROCERS IN THIS CITY SELL HOROWITZ-MARGARETEN MATZOHS. BUY THEM AT ONCE TO BE ASSURED OF A PLEASANT PASSOVER.

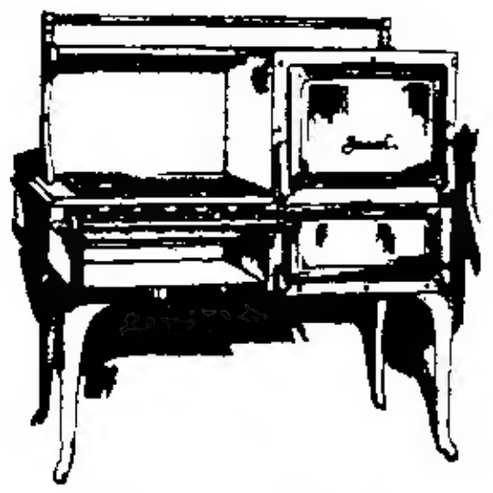
Gas Ranges of Unrivalled Excellence



A Beach gas range equipped with a Robertshaw "Automaticook" is unquestionably the last word in gas range construction. Any degree of oven temperature is automatically maintained by simply setting a dial at the temperature desired. Uniformly perfect results are assured with considerable saving of TIME, WORRY and EXPENSE.

Beach gas ranges possess an unusually high standard of quality and have taken the lead not by accident, but because of actual merit.

The Traifene Market-Woman

By GRETA BLOOMHILL

Rosie, the eldest of Bobbeh's grandchildren, at whose wedding she had danced over a year ago, had a son. Bobbeh was a great-grandmother! The old lady's excitement was almost pitiful to see, and the after-effects were correspondingly severe. It was not without a pang that she realized how insidiously old age had crept upon her; though surrounded by such love and care as she was, the dominant note in her mind was still one of gladness.

"It is good to live these days," she said later that evening. "To-day one feels safe, but in my time there were so many things to fear—every event in life seemed beset with danger. The birth of a firstborn son especially, was an occasion when an unusual number of holy charms were in demand. A firstborn son, somehow—I don't know why—was an attraction for all the evil spells and devils that existed. Why even when your Uncle Joseph—my eldest child—was born, we watched over him anxiously, believing that some fearful thing might happen."

"And did anything happen?'" asked Leonard, scenting a story.

"No," said Bobbeh. "My mother's cousin—the son of that very Hanne whom I told you about some time ago—was a very wise Rav. He knew exactly what to do, and the child, thank God, grew up safe and sound. But I remember a friend of my mother's who once told us how she lost her firstborn through another woman's evil practices."

She lived in a large town in Eastern Europe, and had a baby that was a few months old. She was a poor woman whose husband had been crippled in a street accident, and was unable to earn more than the most miserable pittance. So the wife, whose name was Sarai, took up an occupation at which she had been an adept in her girlhood—the making of men's cloth caps. She lived near the market place, and often, when she was too busy to attend to cooking, she would buy of the market-women's fare. Her favourite dish was a kind of rich calves'-foot aspic, with the calves' feet chopped up and flavoured with garlic. This dish was called "sultz," and it seemed to figure largely on the menu of the inhabitants of that town, for there was a whole row of market-women who sold little else besides.

All at once, without any warning, the firstborn sons in that town began to die. One by one, youths, children, young babes in perfect health—all firstborn male children of their parents—lay down and died. The town was desolated with mourning, and in nearly every home that one entered parents were sitting shiva. The doctors were baffled, for they could discover no symptoms of disease in the bodies; they concluded that some hitherto unknown malady had broken out.

But the Rav knew better. He guessed at once that here was no mere epidemic or mysterious bodily ailment, but a genuine evidence of divine requital for some breach of the Holy Law.

When the afflicted people, finding the doctors worse than useless, sent a deputation to the Rav to beg him to exercise his wisdom in discovering what had caused this terrible curse, the great man was at first a little diffident. He had expected them to come to him at once; he had watched them pin their faith to Gentile doctors; and now!—as a last resource—they came to their Rav! Still, he remembered that the God of Israel was an Av horachamin, and so he unbent his sternness and asked them to bring him a list of all the children who had died, for he wished to visit the houses of their parents. This they did.

Sarai's child had been among the first to die, and when the Rav came she and her husband were eating their midday meal with what little appetite they could summon from their affliction. As it happened, they had before them the favourite dish of sultz. They had not had the heart to think of buying any for nearly three weeks, but Sarai had eaten so little lately and had become so emaciated with fretting for the babe, that her husband, hoping to tempt her palate with the savoury comestible, had gone out and brought some home.

As soon as the Rav entered, his eye fell upon the food.

"What is this?" he asked.

"Why, Rav! Don't you know it? It is sultz made of calves' feet."

"Calves' feet!" cried the Rav. "Calves' nothing. This is not calves' feet, my children. Where did you buy these calves' feet?"

Thoroughly frightened now, Sarai stammered forth, "We did not buy the feet, Reb-leben; we bought it ready cooked from Shieledige Miriam, the market-woman who has the third stall in the Market Street."

"A-roi-oi-oi!" cried the Rav, drawing out the last syllable in a singing tone. At the same time he nodded his head slowly in a manner which indicated that he had at last hit upon the root of the trouble. "Have you ever before bought any sults of this same market-woman?"

"The very men who say that Moses and Jesus were myths will admit the existence of some unknown Athenian slave who left no impress on history, while they denied the existence of these towering spiritual giants who have so effectively and beautifully moulded civilization. These are not myths but living forces, eloquent tongues, prophetic voices calling out to mankind. They live in hearts and souls, in deeds and lives. Jesus of the New Testament is for me not the miracle worker, but rather the teacher of righteousness and a prophet of a higher social order, teachings which he taught in common with the prophets of Israel.

"The season of Lent will culminate in the spring festival of Easter, originally Passover, the Festival of the Resurrection. For Christians it will signify the resurrection of their Jewish God. I wish for a resurrection—I, a Jew, wish for it—for a resurrection of the ideals taught by the Nazarene, for the resurrection of the ideals of peace, of love, of brotherhood and of humility, from the graves of war, of hate, of envy and of arrogance in which they are buried. That will be a real resurrection and that will testify that Jesus is not a myth but a living force."—From a sermon by Rabbi F. M. Isserman of Holy Blossom Synagogue, Toronto.

The Zionist Record of Johannesburg, South Africa, portrays Jewry in that country as labouring under an affliction otherwise known as the meshulach. The meshulachim are a plague, their credentials are doubtful, their institutions are of little or no utility, their methods are unscrupulous or dishonest or both and the public is urged to give them a wide berth. Worse and more of it, for the meshulachim have increased and multiplied so that the rabbis are crying out against them in letters to the press. These meshulachim are pictured as going about collecting for Palestinian and East European Yeshivas, hospitals and orphanages, bearing in their hands elaborate and ornate documents and letters of introduction. It is openly said of them that their credentials are worthless, out of date and sometimes forged. It is charged that many of the institutions they represent are unworthy of support, ill-managed and maintained for the benefit of their officials and job-holders. The meshulachim are said to help themselves to an enormous percentage of what they collect and to tell awful lies about the merits of their institutions and the astonishing demerits of the ones they don't represent. One week a meshulach will say he represents a Jerusalem Yeshiva and take the contents of a National Fund box. The next week he will pose to the same unthinking lady as a Keren Hayesod collector and empty the box again.

Everyone is ready to call down maledictions upon the heads of the messengers. No one will say a good word, just as though romance were dead. Whether it is South Africa which pays or Canadian towns in far-off provinces or a handful of Jews in Georgia, and whether the meshulach pockets all the money or fakes his credentials, he earns his right to live! To many isolated Jewish communities the only travellers from afar are the ones who spread the colorful contents of their pedlars' packs upon the floor, or the wandering collectors. The meshulachim have been places, they have seen things, they have eaten chicken noodle soup in Wirballen and Zuebenbergen, Cape Town and Richmond, Va. They spell adventure to many who live in corners and wonder what the word is doing. Long may they wander, deep though their duplicity prove to be when the hoodwinked and their money have parted! Usually where they are romance is—something hard to buy with money.

The business office, that prima donna of most publications, is full of complaints which it often wants aired in this column in the way that a loyal Englishman writes to the London Times for outlet. Occasionally it deserves a hearing and this is one time. It seems that a young gentleman who fits the term of ardent Jew and specialist in ideals came to the REVIEW office to place an advertisement for an organization which guides part of Toronto's Jewish youth. According to the rate card the amount came to $12.60. "I'll give you $10 for it," said the young gentleman ingratiatingly. What the business office said beyond the word "no" it is not necessary to repeat here. "Oh," said the young gentleman, "although you are a Jewish paper I see you do not do business in a Jewish way." This young gentleman evidently accepts as a matter of course that when a Jew does business he always beats down the price. Had he been doing business with a Gentile he would have resented hotly any such possible remark as "Oh, no. You can't Jew me down like that." Then he would have written a letter to the REVIEW telling all about how insulted he had been by an anti-Semite. f.f.c.

The Market-Woman

"Oh, often. For nearly a month now she has had the stall. But we have bought from the other women also."

The holy man looked graver and graver. After a few more questions he enjoined them to eschew the savoury, "for," said he, "the sultz is not what it seems."

This injunction, together with the Rav's portentous air, was enough to convince them that there was something radically wrong.

Even with the toothsome flavour of the sultz in their mouths, and its piquant aroma saluting their nostrils, Sarai and her husband threw it to some scavenging dogs that had been looking on hungrily. The dogs, delighted at this windfall, devoured the dainty in one big Eckerish gulp, while Sarai and her husband, watching them, mournfully munched dry bread and radishes, and wondered what the sultz really contained.

The Rav visited many of the other afflicted homes, and everywhere he found that sultz had been eaten at some time or other. But most of the parents could no tell for certain which of the market-women had been patronized. They used to buy from one or the other as the fancy took them, they said. In every home the Rav forbade the consumption of the popular savoury, at the same time enjoining strict silence. He told them that one of the market-women had been guilty of a serious breach of the Mosaic Law, and that unless they observed strict secrecy so that his suspicion would not be known to her, he might have difficulty in tracing the culprit. Thus, excepting for a sudden slump in the hitherto much-sought-after sultz, the market-women had not the faintest notion of what was coming.

That evening the Rav called together his disciples. "My sons," he said, "I have discovered the reason of the curse upon this town. One of the women who sell calves'-feet sultz in the Market, has been using swine's feet because they are cheaper, and selling them to the people."

An exclamation of disgust and surprise broke from the mouth of everyone present. The Rav went on. "This abomination has been in our midst for nearly a month. Is it any wonder that the firstborn sons of the people have died? But listen, my children. Thee Lord is merciful and he will deliver us. To-morrow I shall go into the market place, and it shall be given me to discover which woman has done this, and to remove the curse. A minyan of Talmudic students must go with me. Who will come?"

Immediately ten yeshiva-bocherim offered themselves, and the Rav retired with them to study and pray all night, that the curse might be withdrawn.

The following morning found a row of sad-faced, disgruntled market-women sitting each beneath her huge umbrella, and brooding over the unwanted sultz.

For three days now had the slump lasted. Yesterday they had to throw away the stale calves' feet, and bankruptcy stared them in the face. A crowd of scavenging dogs, looking uncommonly well-fed, stood by hoping for a continuation of yesterday's millenium.

Several of the women were talking about giving up that line of business and entering the zimmes trade, when they saw the Rav and his yeshiva-bocherim walk up the street. The company stopped in front of the stalls, and there the Rav cried loudly:

"Chazar-fiesslach stellt eich auf!
Kalbe-fiesslach bleibt liegen!"
(Swine-feet, arise!
Calves' feet, remain as you are!)

Immediately the chopped-up hogs' feet in squint-eyed Miriam's stall began to piece themselves together, and while she watched, paralyzed and speechless with fright, they stood up in all their naked, traifene entirety.

The Rav slowly walked from stall to stall, but in all the others the innocent calves' feet had remained disjointed and quiescent. Before Miriam's stall he stopped, and while the guilty wretch threw herself at his feet and begged for mercy, he said not a word, but pointed to the upright row of trotters. The yeshiva-bocherim shook their heads and whispered to one another behind their hands, and even the scavenging dogs sat up and waited to see what would happen next.

They took Shielodge Miriam before a conclave of the elders of the Synagogue, and there the Rav pronounced his verdict.

In the Laws of Moses it is written "Vengeance belongeth to me, and recompense." Not a hair of the woman's head was to be touched by human hand, but she must go to the graveyard that evening and spend the night upon the Tahare-bret. (Place where dead bodies are laid out before burial.)

Practically the whole congregation followed her to the cemetery, but not a soul was allowed to remain there with her. The people left her and returned home. Late into the night they sat up discussing that day's happenings, and marveling at their Rav's exceeding wisdom. The holy man himself was in the Synagogue all night with his yeshiva-bocherim, praying that the Lord should deal mercifully with squint-eyed Miriam. At daybreak he and the disciples went to the cemetery to see how the poor sinner had fared. But her sin had been too great to be treated with lenience. On the flat Tahare-bret where she had laid herself down the night before, they found, not a woman, but a huge sultz, the ingredients of which had been so disintegrated as to be beyond recognition.—Jewish Forum.

England sends us through the Viking Press (New York), a monument to the genius of William Rothenstein, the great portrait artist. Portrait drawings of William Rothenstein with a preface by Max Beerbohm and 104 collotype plates is limited to 150 copies. It is strange in gazing over the portraits to come upon the name of G. B. Shaw and to see above it a youthful countenance entirely unfamiliar to Americans. Then one remembers that Shaw was young once and that Rothenstein has been doing portraits since 1889.

Lord Reading Caps His Career

By J. FRED ESSARY

The author tells the interesting story of Lord Reading, formerly Viceroy of India, who in his twilight years has taken control of a string of English newspapers, the chief of which is the "London Daily Chronicle," formerly managed by David Lloyd George. Essary is concerned with the story of Reading's rise, rather than with his racial characteristics.—The editor.

A new figure—though not exactly an unfamiliar one—has risen in British journalism.

The Marquess of Reading, after holding as many offices of great power as vaulting ambition could wish for, unless it be the prime ministership itself, has now turned to the newspaper as a refuge from an unstimulating and leisurely old age.

He has taken over control of the "London Daily Chronicle," with a group of associated provincial papers from David Lloyd George, and proposes to devote himself to their publication as proprietor and super-editor.

He is, therefore, not only the newest arrival among Fleet Street publishers, but he is the latest recruit to the group of "press peers" who may write in behalf of their policies in their morning papers and speak in behalf of them on the floor of the House of Lords in the afternoon.

It is an interesting fact, however, that such policies as they advocate get more attention from these men as editors than as peers of the realm. It is hard to recall a speech in the Lords, for example, from Lord Rothermere, proprietor of the "Daily Mail," or from Lord Beaverbrook, proprietor of the "Daily Express," or Lord Burnham, proprietor of the "Daily Telegraph."

And nobody supposes that Lord Reading will be an exception to the rule. He will be much occupied in running his string of newspapers and in learning a new trade. For although he has done many interesting and important things in his life, from sailing before the mast to governing the 450,000,000 people in India, he never before had anything to do with gathering news or of daily publishing his views upon the large and small interests of the world.

Neither had his predecessor in the proprietorship of the "Daily Chronicle" for that matter. Mr. Lloyd George took over that newspaper some years ago with his allied journals, with no practical experience as a journalist. He was purely a politician, just as he has been ever since, and yet he was able to sell these properties for more than $5,000,000.

The late owner needed a newspaper organ to which he could dictate a line of policy. There were other Liberal newspapers in the country—"the Manchester Guardian," "the Daily News," and the "Westminster Gazette" among them—but while they might be Liberal, they were not exactly Lloyd Georgian. The former premier wanted a journal of his own and to get it he invested his party's campaign fund in the "Daily Chronicle." But the time came when Mr. Lloyd George needed to liquify his parts assets. He required much spot cash. He had agreed, after the vanquishment of Lord Oxford and Asquith, to finance all the Liberal party candidates, and in order to make good the proposal, it was necessary for him to get his money out of his newspapers.

Then it was that Lord Reading appeared. The Marquess also is a Liberal. Also he is rich. Also he was out of a job, so to speak. Also he was willing to keep the "Chronicle" Liberal. So it came to pass that Lloyd George found an ideal customer in Lord Reading. They soon came to terms. The Liberal leader sold out to the Liberal follower. The former drew out his money without losing the support of his paper. The latter acquired a thing that promises to keep his fertile mind from stagnating.

And that Lord Reading's mind is fertile is proved by the facts of his remarkable career. As a youth he ran away to sea, but was corralled before it was too late, brought home and was educated in Brussels and London, becoming a lawyer of the Middle Temple in 1904.

Also he was a stockbroker for a time, but it was his career as a lawyer that shines. In six years after becoming a bencher he was made Solicitor-General, and almost immediately thereafter became Attorney-General, the first official of that rank to be given a seat in the cabinet. In 1913 he became Lord Chief Justice of England, the next highest judicial office in the Empire. Only the Lord Chancellor is higher.

Then came a period of war service. He stepped down from the bench to become president of the Anglo-French Loan Mission to the United States in 1915. Two years later, after America had entered the war, he was made a special British envoy to the United States, and in 1918 was appointed High Commissioner and Ambassador to the United States.

Once the war was over, England turned her attention to her Indian problems. There were vital "reforms" that needed to be carried out in that country. The Amritsar cloud still disturbed the relations between the people of India and the British Government. Ghandi's revolt had to be dealt with. The Moslem extremists were propagating a dangerous anti-British feeling. And on top of all these troubles was the economic depression in India caused by frontier disorders, monsoons and repeated crop failures.

After canvassing the field, it was decided that Lord Reading, who had been ennobled in 1914, made a viscount in 1916 and an earl in 1917, was selected to become Viceroy of India. He might well have declined so difficult a job, one which had wrecked the careers of many good men, but he had gambled on success all his life, and decided to take one more chance.

There was nothing more than a grateful Government could do for the Earl of Reading, when he came home, but push him up another notch in the peerage. He received his marquisate, in recognition of his services in India, the day after his return to London, this, moreover, from a Conservative ministry.

Possessed of ample wealth and a seat in the House of Lords, Lord Reading might easily have retired to a life of leisure and to the writing of his memoirs. Most people of his age and with his honours in England, top off their careers with memoirs.

But this active mind wanted something else to do. He could not be content poking his head in at the House of Lords once a week, or sitting around a Pall Mall club like a sleepy rear admiral on the retired list. One adventure he had never experienced was the management of a newspaper and, like many people who had never adventured in that direction, he thought he could do a better job than many already engaged at it.

But it required money—a great deal of it—to buy the Chronicle and its subsidiaries. Lord Reading did not want to mortgage his whole fortune to that end, so he cast about for some associates who would help him finance the deal. He mentioned the idea to Sir David Yule, a short, bristly-moustached Scot, who was very rich and willing also to take a hand in a game whether the stakes were large or small.

It may have been better for the newspaper if a professional journalist had gained control of it once more, but if it had to fall into the hands of another capitalist or politician or peer, it is probably just as well that it should go to a man whose intellectual standing is assured and whose intimate knowledge of men and measures is beyond question. —The Exponent.

Yiddish Spirituals

By SAMUEL CHOTZINOFF

It wasn't so long ago that Negro music meant coon songs, cake-walks and the funny, talky ballads of the late inimitable Bert Williams. The discovery of the Negro spiritual came as a shock. The spiritual told us more about the Negro than all the investigation about him since the Civil War. It appeared that he took his religion not only seriously but ecstatically. Indeed, his feelings about anecdotes and parables of both Testaments were of sufficient depth to take the shape of first-rate lyrical utterances, the beauty and passion of which dwarfed all other American "white" music.

I think the music of nations could stand periodic excavations. Since, for some reason known only to the Almighty, civilization has little to do with the creation of beautiful melodies, good music might be unearthed in the most unlikely places. Better tunes have been collected among the ignorant mountaineers of Kentucky than among the more literate peasantry of Massachusetts. The music of the Russian muzhik when he lived in perpetual fear of the knout was good enough to be the foundation of the modern Russian school. Of course, it takes highly civilized individuals to unearth and disseminate these treasures. The whites have made the spirituals popular, even imposing them on Negro artists.

There must be enough beautiful folk melodies in Ireland to discredit forever the spurious, trashy ballads of the "Ireland must be heaven because mother was born there" type, which represents Erin for us here in America. Our idea of Jewish music is even sadder. The maudlin, treacly Jewish melodramas and comedies which held the Yiddish stage until the advent of the Yiddish Art Theatre and the appearance of the Vilna troupe were responsible for the manufacture of a sob-stuff type of song suitable for musical interpolation. These songs bore the same relation to the genuine Jewish folk-song that the plays they accompanied bore to such real drama as the "Dybbuk," or the exquisite folk comedies of Perez Hirshbein. But there are signs of an awakened interest in old Jewish music. The Brunswick Company has put out a couple of records of these songs by the balladist, Isa Kremer. Unfortunately for those who do not understand Yiddish, the humour and the nature of the words will be lost, but I doubt whether that would interfere with an appreciation of the strangeness and beauty of the music.

The Yiddish tunes are as deeply coloured by a living and startlingly present faith as the Negro spirituals. The piety in both is ecstatic and naive. Yet the Jew finds occasion to sing about other things, although there is present at all times an undercurrent of his belief.

One of the songs shows a young woman cleverly steering her doubting swain to the altar, and the verbal adroitness and cool confidence of her harangue to the miserable wretch is actually Shavian. "Why do you sulk all day and walk about with your nose to the ground?" she asks archly. "I can't imagine the cause. Is it because you don't think I am fond of you? Well, then, let's hitch up and ride over to the good Jew (rabbi)."

But now there appears a more serious note, even more effective than the raillery. "When we arrive at the good Jew's," she proceeds, "we will ask him to pray to the Almighty to bless our union." After this climax of what one might term biological suggestion, not unlike the great, final appeal of the heroine to the hero in Shaw's "Man and Superman," the lady, sure of her effect, returns to her coquetry and promises to buy him a watch and chain at a neighbouring fair on their return journey if he will buy her a satin gown.

Another, and a lighter tune, describes a flirtation of a chossidel, a young student of the Talmud. A chossidel is, of course, presumed to be too absorbed in spiritual matters to be conscious of the existence of women. This particular chossidel manages, by the suggestive intonation of the sing-song "bim-bam" used in humming religious ditties, to acquaint the girl with his un-Talmudic frame of mind.

In "Majerke mein Suhn," already known in the arrangement by Ravel, the religious motif is paramount. "Do you know in whose presence you stand?" the father demands of his little son. "In the presence of the Almighty," the child replies. "What have you to ask of Him?" "Long life, my daily bread, and a male heir." The child's amazing prayer is clothed in music passionately ornate. The words glow with desire. They are the direct prayer for the preservation of the race.

Finally, there is a touching portrait of a Jewish ne'er-do-well. This unlucky person is unfortunate in a very special way. It is a lamentable tale of absolute and complete frustration. The fates and luck are dead against him. He could have been a merchant, but it seems he had nothing to sell; he might have been a rabbi, but, alas, he knew no Torah; a baker, but he lacked the facilities; a butcher, but no butcher's knife. To finish the tale, he possessed neither hay nor oats, was addicted to brandy, and his wife was a shrew. Overwhelmed by these afflictions he spent his time in weeping.—New York World.

efforts to convert them. Of course, any people with pride in its traditions and love for its faith, will resent the slur which is hurled in its direction by people, however sincere, who desire to convert them. Christians would resent Jewish missionaries trying to wean Christians from their faith, and Jews resent Christian missionaries trying to alienate Jews from their faith.

But the intelligent Jew who sees these persevering efforts made to change his faith is perplexed and frequently asks himself some questions. He looks out in the Christian world. He sees how divided Christians are in their opinions about the truth which some are so anxious to give to Jews. He sees how Christians war and quarrel with one another about their creedal and other differences. He sees that Christians cannot unite on any definition of Christianity. He sees Protestant duel with Catholic; Baptist with Baptist, Presbyterian with Presbyterian. He cannot but ask which one of these Christian sects possesses the truth and which one of the groups within these sects has the correct teachings? If a religious group has not in its own ranks defined acceptably for all its fundamental teaching, then how can it appeal to others to accept teachings about which there is so much disagreement, and even quarrelling.

Leaving aside these innumerable Christian sects with their various expressions of religious truth, the intelligent Jew turns to practical Christianity and asks, has it succeeded? There, too, his answer is negative. Christianity has struggled for centuries to fill a world with love. The Jew to-day sees a world filled with hatred and prejudice. Christianity for centuries has advocated meekness and humility. The Jew to-day sees the Christian nations as the most arrogant and militaristic in the world. The Jew asks himself about his own treatment by the Christian throughout the ages. What nightmares such reflection invokes! Christianity's ghastly failure to make itself practised is best revealed in its treatment of the Jew. Hatred for the Jew! Prejudice against him! Christian rulers burnt, tortured and exploited him. Even to-day prejudices stalk and rage. Hatred against the Jew multiplies. The intelligent Jew who has studied and even appreciates Christianity asks where is Christianity in the welter of hatred and prejudice? Again he is perplexed.

Lastly the intelligent Jew scans the Christian world, and there he finds an unrest and a discontent. A quiet revolt is taking place not only among leaders but even among the more intelligent laymen of the Christian church. That revolt is termed modernism. The outpost of that revolt are the Unitarian Church. Everywhere in Christian life liberalism is making headway and becoming stronger. How does liberalism express itself? It expresses itself chiefly in its repudiation of doctrines which initially caused the separation between Judaism and Christianity. Liberal Christianity is facing about and again approaching Judaism from which it has so long been alienated. Perceiving this tendency, the intelligent Jew again asks why this rage and passion for conversion?

Jews need not become Christians to function freely. Neither need Christians become Jews. But followers of both religions by expressing their common prophetic heritage can function best. Jews practising Judaism and Christians practising Christianity should be the goal of all religious teachers. The energy spent in converting Jews can well be utilized in Christian churches. This attitude was expressed by a body of American ministers who recently declared their opposition to attempts to convert the Jews. May this attitude grow!

NORTHERN ONTARIO CANADA

Northern Ontario, now open for settlement at fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water, power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and in return will give health, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable John S. Martin, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regards to acquiring a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

This laundry introduced the "semi-finished" method of family washing to Toronto housewives? And later—more recently—the 24-hour "super-speed" service, taken to-day and back to your home first thing to-morrow morning? These two distinctly Toronto achievements by this laundry have done much to improve living conditions for householders in this city. They are very reasonably priced and we know you will be delighted from the moment you phone us.

One Reason why the Food is so GOOD!

Good restaurants do not think of saving ice when the temperature outside calls for overcoats. They wouldn't risk it. Ice costs them little compared to the value of food quality and flavor which it protects. The same is true in your home. It is false economy to buy ice by the calendar. You need it every day in the year.

The quality of the food you buy is no doubt as good as that served in the best hotel or restaurant in town. An efficient refrigerator filled with crystal-pure ice will keep your food wholesome, and retain flavor until you serve it.

attempt to readjust your life to the terms of the new world. You blunder ludicrously. Like one playing "blindman's buff" you stagger around, groping, seizing at sharp ends and treacherous holds. It is your privilege to do so. You pay the price. But when it comes to dealing with the adjustments of your children you ought to be more careful. Your children are receiving a worldly education in the schools. The nutriment of the environment enters their blood, and an intimate primal relationship grows up between them. You are anxious to acquaint your children with the Jewish ideal of life. Your object should be to harmonize the two ideals—the Jewish ideal and the American ideal—in the character and mental dispositions of your children. Are you conversant with the nature of the two ingredients? Do you know the proper proportions? Do you understand your children, and do you know how to treat them?

We have a chaos of organizations and institutions reflecting the chaos of our life. Most of them will gradually disappear as our life will become more stabilized. Our educational institutions—our Talmud Torahs, and our curricula—however, have a bearing on, and will influence, the life of the Jews of to-morrow. The men in charge of them are therefore vested with an unusual responsibility. They must be fully alive to the significance of their responsibility. And they must not allow narrow prejudices and old-world biases to stultify the ideal of giving their children a modern education in the light of the best modern ideas of education. A.B.B.

A New Vegetable Base for Inecto Rapid

Pember's dream has been realized. For three years we have been straining every nerve to produce a new base for Inecto.

After searching Germany, France and England without success, we have succeeded in producing a vegetable base.

In the near future the original Inecto will contain this new product, which we consider the greatest advance and success in scientific research produced by a Canadian.

LOEW'S

Lost in a big city!

Literally, that's exactly the position she was in! Only things were worse. Her husband had disappeared and Maria didn't know where to go for help. That's how Thomas Meighan's current vehicle, "Blind Alleys," starts. Married to a shy Cuban beauty, they reach New York on their honeymoon, and on the very first night, an auto knocks Tom unconscious. Maria hears of an unidentified man in a Park Avenue hospital and sets out. She enters an occupied taxi by mistake and the occupants, thieves escaping from a jewelry store hold-up, throw her to the floor!

"Blind Alleys" will be shown at Loew's Theatre starting Monday, April 11. Greta Nissen and Evelyn Brent are featured. Owen Davis is the author and Frank Tuttle the director.

Al Lentz and his tuneful comedians, famous radio entertainers, will top the vaudeville programme.

REGENT THEATRE

The screen version of "McFadden's Flats" comes to the Regent Theatre next week. Charlie Murray is the hod-carrying Irishman and Chester Conklin a Scotch barber. Edna Murphy has the leading feminine role. Dorothy Dawn, Cissy Fitzgerald, Larry Kent, Aggie Herring, DeWitt Jennings, Freeman Wood, Dot Farley and Leo White are other members. "McFadden's Flats" unfolds the story of the troubles of an Irishman who, after coming to America, has ambitions to get out of the ranks of hod-carriers and build an apartment house bearing his name.

The Kerr-Bryson Eastern Tour will include visits to many of the interesting spots which figured so prominently in the struggle between France and Britain for the possession of the new empire, Montreal (originally the Indian village of Hochelaga), Quebec City, with its vivid memories of Wolfe and Montcalm, Cape Breton, Annapolis and Boston.

If you wish to make sure of your place in one of these tours, you will be well advised to make your reservation now. Send for handsomely illustrated descriptive booklets to H. C. Mrs. Betty Wollman, who survived many a fight with border ruffians on the Kansas frontier seventy years ago and who has been successful in helping her sons fight the bears and bulls of Wall Street during the last decade, found herself loaded with the responsibilities of an art critic the other day. For the first time in her ninety years she evaded what was plainly an issue. It was Mrs. Wollman's commission to choose one of the twelve models on display at the Reinhardt Galleries on Fifth Avenue, comprising the competitive efforts of twelve sculptors—including Jo Davidson—for the monument to the pioneer woman which will be erected in Oklahoma by E. W. Marland, the oil man, at a cost of $350,000. The difficulty proved to be that Mrs. Wollman liked them all. Mrs. Wollman, mother of Henry J. and B. F. Wollman, went west in 1855 with her husband and was a pioneer woman herself. Captures by Indians, fights with border ruffians, arguments with Mormons—all are in her list of poignant memories. To-day, at ninety, she manages to keep amused and excited by following the intricate doings of Wall Street and advising her sons accordingly.

The famous Burns collection owned by R. B. Adams, of Buffalo, has just been bought by Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach. In commenting on his purchase Dr. Rosenbach said he regarded it as one of the most important transactions he had ever made, because the Burns collection is the largest in existence, gathered over a period of over fifty years by Mr. Adam and his father. In the collection are about forty original manuscripts. The entire collection is said to be insured for nearly $250,000.
